What is social media?

Social media refers to websites and applications that are designed to allow people to share content quickly, efficiently, and in real-time. Many people define social media as apps on their smartphone or tablet, but the truth is, this communication tool started with computers.

Parents should know this

As teenagers we are always told to be careful when we are using the internet, but parents have to learn as well

Many parents post stories, photos, and videos of their kids on social media because they're proud of their families and they want to stay connected with relatives and friends. But how much sharing is too much, and can sharing on social media put children in danger?

Posting on Social Media Can Invade Your Child's Privacy

First of all, according to scientist, at around 5 years old children start to develop a sense of themselves as individuals and how the rest of the world perceives them. Their privacy becomes more of a concern. They may start to feel embarrassed about the content their parents post about them on social media, especially when it comes to early childhood anecdotes, funny photos, and updates on developmental and behavioural challenges.

Second of all, You should also be concerned about how others may react to the stuff you share about your child on social media. Whether your child cares about old photos and stories about them on social media, others may be able to use that information to make fun of, insult, and even bully your child as he or she grows older.
